

01/10/16 Baptism of Jesus Sunday

“Overwhelming Waters and Unquenchable Fires” -- Rev. Seth D. Jones ©

Isaiah 43:1-7; Acts 8:14-17; Luke 3:15-22

The great Reformer of the Church, Martin Luther, when he was overcome with doubts, despair and depression - which was more common than you might think - used to say to himself, “Remember you are baptized”. In the overwhelming floods of grief that can consume us and in the fires of trial and trouble, Luther says, “remember your baptism”, if you have been baptized as an adult, or, “remember you are baptized” if you have been baptized as an infant. To remember his baptism meant a great deal to Luther. We hear these words whenever we have the opportunity to witness a baptism:

“We who are baptized into the Christian faith are called to remember we are welcomed into the family of Jesus Christ every time we are witness to a baptism.”

Today we celebrate the baptism of Jesus in the River Jordan, so let's spend some time reflecting on the meaning of baptism.

There are many views of what baptism is and what it means, so I am going to do my best to reflect the Reformation view of baptism combined with my personal view, which has some shades of Lutheranism, Quakerism and Catholicism in there, but you won't be able to tell which is which because I can't either.

Even so, at a fundamental level, our ritual and liturgy of baptism intends to make explicit things which are implicit in the story of Jesus' baptism.

To begin, I will define baptism in this way:

Baptism is an act of God which aligns our spiritual life to the example of Jesus Christ. Through baptism, we participate in Christ's earthly church and in the Divine Mystery of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit. By water and Word baptism welcomes us into and makes us responsible to the family of Jesus Christ.

Notice how I began my definition: baptism is an act of God. This is important. Baptism is by God's initiative first. The action and promise of God is where baptism starts; our actions and promises in response make us responsible to our baptism. So when we remember our baptism, we remember first what God has done, which is to love us and bring us into the loving embrace of our adoption by God. Isaiah puts it this way:

Do not fear for I am with you; I will bring your offspring from the east, and from the west I will gather you...bring my sons from far away and bring my daughters from the end of the earth -- everyone who is called by my name, whom I created for my glory, whom I formed and made. (Is 43:5-7).

God reaches out to us and gathers us in. We respond in the way of Christ's example - by having water poured upon us combined with the words of God. We do this together, and in doing so, we participate in the life of God along with those who have also followed in the example of Jesus Christ.

So first, I want us to understand that baptism is an act of God towards us before anything else. Our expression of faith is secondary to God's primary act of drawing us to the waters of baptism, where we hear the words Jesus heard from the heavens, "You are my beloved child. In you I am well-pleased". When we remember our baptism we are remembering God first loved and called us.

Secondly, when we remember our baptism, we align our spiritual life to the life of Jesus Christ. When we are talking about aligning our spiritual lives with the life of Christ, we are seeking to align our expectations, our hopes and our dreams with a mystery. We are giving ourselves over to the unknown. We go into the world with a certain confidence which defies security and safety, because that confidence is that God is with us. If we know our Scripture even a little bit, we know very well that the alignment of our lives with God and Christ is not a call to safety and security. Rather, it is like stepping into complete darkness while blindfolded. This is part of how we trust our baptism in our daily life.

In remembering our baptism, we have expectations of God's kingdom. We expect that the light of God's kingdom will make itself known to us in our lives together, in our service to others and in the love we share with the world. We expect that Christ will be present with us wherever we gather together in His name and when we share in the bread and the wine of communion. We expect that the Holy Spirit will be active in our lives and the fruits of the Spirit will make themselves known to us. This is all true.

What we cannot know, however, is what the specific outcome of our expectations will look like; only that if we are truly aligned with Christ by remembering our baptism, the outcomes will begin to look like the presence of Jesus Christ as revealed to us in Scripture, in our loving interactions and in our relationships.

In the first several centuries of the church, baptism was preceded by a long period - upwards of three years - of catechism, or teaching. A catechumenate, or a new Christian, would have a mentor who would pray with you and would bring you to worship services. The new Christian would gather with other catechumens and they would study Scripture, pray and learn about the faith together. Then, on Easter eve, the group of new Christians would gather together before midnight. They would pray together in an isolated area of the church, in the back and away from the sanctuary. Then, just before midnight, they would be asked to strip off their clothes and would be led down a long dark hallway. At the end of the hallway was a large tub filled with cold water. Naked, and in darkness, but in view of the members in the sanctuary, the new Christian would be submerged in the tub three times and would have the words of baptism spoken over them, “I baptize you in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit”. They were then brought up out of the water and dressed all in white. Then the newly baptized Christian would step out into the brightly lit sanctuary very early on Easter morning. The gathered assembly would welcome them and all the church would share communion together for the first time with the newly baptized. The newly baptized were now full participants in the family of Christ and participants in the mystery of God.

So thirdly, in remembering our baptism we remember that we are, by the invitation of God and God’s people, participants in the family of Jesus Christ. We become part of the ‘communion of saints’ to which we testify whenever we say the Apostle’s Creed: I believe in the Holy Spirit, the holy catholic church, in the communion of saints... This, our participation in the baptized community of Jesus Christ, is what that phrase refers to.

This means baptism is a communal act, something that is always done in the context of the gathered body of the church. In our individual baptism, we share what Christ has done in his baptism all those many years ago, and we also share it with one another. This is why remembering our baptism is not necessarily dependent on our conscious recollection of your personal baptism - the memory is carried by the community for us. By participating in the life of the baptized we are remembering our baptism.

In baptism, we participate in the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. Luther used to speaking of our daily rising and dying in Jesus Christ. By this he meant what Paul meant in Romans 6:3-4:

Do you not know that all of us who have been baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into his death? Therefore we have been buried with him by baptism into death, so that, just as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, so we too might walk in the newness of life.

We participate directly in the divine relationship between the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit when we are baptized into Christ's death and resurrection. We are incorporated into the Trinity through our baptism. The creation, redemption, resurrection and salvation of God through Jesus Christ for us is expanded to include each of us in the Trinitarian relationship, by the power of the Holy Spirit.

In many liturgically focused churches - Catholic, Lutheran, Episcopalian, some Methodist churches - there is a baptismal font at the entrance of the sanctuary or meeting house. This is so a person can remember their baptism by touching the water and then drawing a cross on their forehead whenever they enter and leave the sacred gathering of the baptized. In this way, the gathered community of Christ can remember who they are and whose they are.

So fourthly, remembering our baptism is all about our identity, who we say we are. Who are we, then, in our baptized lives together? The Gospel of Luke told us today:

You are my child, the Beloved; with you I am well pleased.

We have a hard time, I think, hearing that these words are about us. Because Christ was baptized, we are baptized; therefore, because Jesus Christ heard the words "You are my Son, the Beloved; with you I am well pleased", we therefore also hear the words, "You are a beloved child of God in whom the Lord is well pleased" when the waters of baptism touched your head.

Did you realize these words said to Christ were also meant for you?

Repeat after me,

“I am a beloved child of God in whom the Lord is well pleased.”

These are words of baptism. If the phrase “Remember your baptism” is confusing to you, then say the words of baptism themselves to yourself.

Repeat after me,

“I have been baptized in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit.”

Who are we, then? We are the beloved children of God, a God who is pleased in our participation with us. This is the blessing of our relationship with the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, for the sake of Jesus Christ and the whole world.

My definition of baptism was:

Baptism is an act of God which aligns our spiritual life to the example of Jesus Christ. Through baptism, we participate in Christ’s earthly church and in the Divine Mystery of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit. By water and Word baptism welcomes us into and makes us responsible to the family of Jesus Christ.

On this day when we celebrate the baptism of Jesus Christ, remember your baptism and remember you were baptized.

God has claimed you and baptism is the sign of that claim God has made upon you. For Martin Luther, it was a lifeline in times of trouble, during rushing, cleansing waters and purifying fires.

When the waters of life overwhelmed him, Luther remembered his baptism.

He remembered the water that fell upon him at his baptism was, by the mystery of God, the same water which fell upon Jesus at his baptism.

Luther remembered his baptism was first an act of God towards him.

He remembered that his baptism was the alignment of his spiritual life to the example of Jesus Christ’s life, death and resurrection.

He remembered that he was a participant in the great history of the communion of saints of the Christian faith.

Luther remembered who he was and whose he was.

He remembered he was a beloved child of God who participates in the work of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit with a group of people who have gathered together to do the same.

May each of us remember this also, that we have been baptized in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, so we might participate joyfully and completely in the great mystery of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, who, by the waters of our baptism, has claimed us for Himself.

Amen.
